| 3.a.          |                                     |   | English general education composition classes have been revised to better meet the needs ofincoming students. ENGL 101 and ENGL 11C have been uncoupled so that students arenow empowered to decide on their own writing needs. ENGL 211 has also beenstandardized to better meet the needs of all students. Strategic investment has been made intechnology and software to expand the virtual reality capabilities of the Language LearningCenter and all foreign language classrooms. This investment supports the departmentalpedagogical strategy of engaging students in non-textbook-based activities with curriculathat respond to student needs. Using VR in the classroom and language laboratory immersesstudents in scenarios that promote cross-cultural communication skills and strategic thinkingwhile promoting ODU students into global citizens. The Quality Enhancement Plan has beenpiloted and will be implemented in the fall. |   | Academic Affairs internal units                         | Next steps are to start the process of reviewing and updating general education requirements in Fall 2023.  | A sum of $20,000 was reallocated from the QEP funds to support this initiative.                                 | Provost and Vice Presidentfor Academic Affairs AustinAgho, Ph.D. |
|               |                                     |   | The Academic Success Center partnered with associate deans to request additional academicadvisors within various colleges to lower caseload numbers and provide morecomprehensive advising. The Center also conducted research to compare advising modelswith the models used by ODU peer institutions. By interviewing advising directors andexperts, the Center will be better positioned to adopt best practices and consider initiativesto improve the advising system and infrastructure.  | Four critical challenges to be addressedinclude: (1) high caseloads for advisors; (2)inadequate coordination and communicationdue to the decentralized advising model; (3)inadequate space to meet the needs ofundeclared or undecided students; and (4) lackof career paths for advisors.  | Academic Affairs internal units                         | There is a need for reorganized positions to serve new needs includingInterdisciplinary Schools. A NACADA consultant team needs toreview and provide recommendations for a possible revised advisingstructure and caseload. Also, research reports should be utilized toupdate the advising models and structures.  | Several positions have been moved from theRegional Higher Education Centers toaugment advising services. | Provost and Vice Presidentfor Academic Affairs AustinAgho, Ph.D. |

DDL has implemented their rubric as part of online course development review, and many DDL staff have been formally trained on the guidelines. Faculty now complete a QM training with Instructional Designers as part of the course development process. Two staff are more fully trained as QM certified facilitators. These externally developed standards provide clear, consistent guidelines to assist content experts in course design and structure that is accessible by a diverse student body and supports their success. DDL is sponsoring and supporting one program (Communication BS) as a pilot for program-level QM certification.   | Faculty expressed interest in being moreinvolved in discussions about standards thatwould be applied at ODU. To facilitate this,DDL established a 20-member Global Policyand Process Committee, 17 of whom arefaculty. This group meets regularly to ensurewide involvement and participation and as weimplement evidence-based quality standardsfor courses. | Digital Learning internal units and AcademicAffairs | Newly-developed online courses will be QM reviewed as part of the development process. Existing online courses will be reviewed and redesigned as necessary based on the QM standards. DDL will identify needed professional development opportunities for faculty and staff and will offer additional QM trainings. Clinical education directors in theSchool of Nursing are now assigned advising duties. The Darden College of Education andProfessional Studies has transitioned graduate teacher education advising to the college'sCentral Advising Office (CARC) to ensure consistency and quicker response to the highnumber of students. The Darden College of Education and Professional Studies has alsohired a Recruitment and Enrollment Specialist to assist graduate program directors anddepartment chairs/school directors with recruitment of students and application criteria,application review process, and enrollment procedures and timeline.  | Resources to hire professional advisors andsupport personnel are needed, along withcreating metrics to determine when programsare large enough to demand their own or ifthey can be shared. Finding time for adequatetraining and development of clinical educationdirectors (nursing) is also an importantelement to consider.                                   | Academic Affairs internal units                         | Next steps are to develop Qualtrics survey to distribute amonggraduate program directors and department chairs/school directors inFall 2023 in order to identify where the greatest advising needs lie,especially within professional master's degree programs. Also,advising modules in CANVAS need to be created based on bestpractices.
